

Lucille Echohawk is a citizen of the Pawnee Nation of Oklahoma and resides in Arvada, Colorado. She has worked in the Indian child welfare field for more than 30 years as a volunteer and was employed in the field as a Strategic Advisor with Casey Family Programs for 12 years. She then served as Executive Director of the Denver Indian Family Resource Center until her retirement in 2014, then again as a volunteer from 2018 until 2020. Though formally retired, she continues to be active in the tribal and Native non-profit community.

She holds a BA degree from Brigham Young University and an MEd from Erikson Institute for Early Education, Loyola University, Chicago.

Lucille served on The Women's Foundation of Colorado's Board of Trustees from 1990-96 and has participated as an Honorary Trustee in the years since that service.

Lucille is a co-founder of Native Americans in Philanthropy, the Denver Indian Center and served as a board chair for the three organizations. She has also served Native Americans in Philanthropy as a Network Weaver for the Southwest Region. Currently she sits on the Tribal Law and Policy Institute's Board of Directors and is a member of the National Advisory Committee for the Child Welfare Capacity Building Center for Tribes. For many years she has been a member of the National Support Council for the Native American Rights Fund and is an at-large member of the Colorado Commission of Indian Affairs. In 2016-17 Lucille served as principal convener of the United National Indian Tribal Youth's (UNITY), 2017 national conference in Denver which drew record attendance of more than 2,000.
